Thust what I say. That is the revenue cutter Tamaqua coming down on us. Captain Marvine is on board her, and shell blow you out of the water if you attempt to get away. Now climb down that ladder and get into that dory alongside your ship. Quick?"

The menace of his voice was ununistable. Brandon's eyes flashed ait about him for some means of escape, but it was all too evident to him that he was caught helpiess. With a glance at the murrie of the gun that covered him, he began a refuctant descent of the ladder, swung himself over the side and soon stood in the dory that bobbed at the end of her painter beside the Sailie.

Now cast off and row out here?

"Permit me, Mr. Sayville," he said.
"Your breakfast, sir."

The mate swung around, and his face went livid and then white. Sayville stood in the how of the aeroplane, his hand on the crank of the machine gun, its nunzile covering the man on the bridge at such close range that a miss would have been almost impossible. "Come back here where you were," Sayville went on. "I have five hundred cartridges in this gun, and I can shoot them at the rate of two hundred and fifty a minute if I want to. Your game Is up."

"Now cast off and row out here," Sayville commanded. "You are to come over and sit with us here so that your men will not shoot at us for fear of hitting you. Come on, now."

Like a man in a dream the mate rowed slowly out to them.

"That will do," said Sayville, catching the end of the painter that Brandon threw him and making it fast to a strut. "Now just sit there and he comfortable. The Tamaqua will be here in a very short time."

"But, Mister," Brandon gasped, still dazed with the suddenness of the climax that had come upon him. "I don't understand this here thing nohow. Ain! you feliers fr'm Cartwright."

"No," said Sayville. "We are officers in the United States payy."

"My God! But how'd you know Cartwright's signal?"

"Why, the red flag his men was to blust when they come out fr me—the red flag of the revolution. I seen you wave it. If it hadn't been fr y's red flag of the revolution. I seen you wave it. Lieut Toland sprang to his feet with an exchamation of boyish joy. He raised his hand and slowly unwrapped from about his neek the scarlet seart that had prought this adventure upon them. Brandon's eyes followed his every movement, fascinated.

"My God!" the mate exclaimfed when he saw what it was. "P' 7001 mean to say I was fooled by a thing like that." But Lieut. Toland did not even glance at him. ANSWER TO YESTERDAY'S PUZZLE. Upper right corner down above lamb,

2 Theres SUMMER ANTICIPATIONS. When the chilly winds of win ter are a-blowing.

And the fields and hedges all are white with rime.

Then we wish that with the girls we might be going.

Picking daines in the good old summer time.

ights through the thin well that ning the eyes seeply in the binding ter. Without a sound they landed and came to rest a hundred yards away, or a soul seemed awake aboard the hip.

As the light increased, they strained heir eyes looking for the first smudge of smoke to the north that should tell hem of the coming of the cutter. But he fees seemed to thicken with the pproach of dawn, and they floated it a constricted circle of mist-bordered essential that wallowing yellow hulk of the schooner.

With a suddenness that startled them he sun seemed to spring from under the north should be seen by him. You'd better get down and get some breakfast before you start: you'll be too busy to eat once you get under way." Frandon stretched himself lazily. Reckon y'er right," he said with a wide yawn. "Gosh-a-mighty! It's a clean mornin, aint it?"

He stoed looking all about him, inhaling deeply of the bracing alr and seemingly in the best of good apirits.
